Often poorly fit into the social universe in which they work, becoming more remote in an academic world whose divisions become more marked, one more responsible for business and society research is one of the barriers to understanding business and society research. A key factor in this is that our understanding of business and society research is not yet sufficiently advanced to understand the complex interactions between business and society. The ability to develop multiple theories and models that are able to adapt to multiple contexts and situations is a key factor in this.

Research that is multi-contextual and multi-theoretical, and that takes into account the dynamics of business and society research, is crucial to understanding business and society research. A multi-contextual approach is needed to understand the complex interactions between business and society.
